IX Research

(a) Major Research Interests

- Algebraic Coding Theory/Systems Programming
- Design & Analysis of Algorithms
- Data Compression
- Modelling of Computer Systems
- Bioinformatics
- Design & Analysis of Library Buildings/Intelligent Building Design

(b) Completed

(1) Data Compression

Development of an efficient binary text compression algorithm. This algorithm has been shown to have a better compression ratio than a popular algorithm used in the design of storage-based built-in test pattern generation for scan circuits.

(2) Mathematical Foundation of Computer Science

Development of a novel geometrical method for ordering an arbitrary subset of the set of complex numbers. Even though the set of complex numbers is said to be an unordered field (i.e. one cannot say that an element of the set is greater or less than another element of the set, on the real line), the new method relied on the famous well-ordering principle (which states that every set can be well-ordered) to present a natural order for an arbitrary subset of the set. The method has important application in practical computational problems which require the comparison of two complex numbers, or the comparison of a complex number and a real number. The algorithm helps in getting an affirmative answer to, for instance, the following intractable computational problem: Is $2i > 2$, where $i = \sqrt{-1}$?

(3) Mathematical Foundation of Computer Science/Modelling of Computer Systems

Construction of fractals (unique computer images) using the method in (2) above. By associating every generated image with a unique face/name, the method has (potential) application in face image (or pattern) recognition system, finger printing technology and digital forensics.

(4) Design and Analysis of Algorithms for Data Communication Code/Algebraic Coding Theory

Design and analysis of an algorithm for constructing the Slepian Standard Array of an n-bit uniform digital code. This array is useful in finding the error pattern of a uniform digital code.

(5) Mathematical Foundation of Computer Science

Development of a method for studying the qualitative equivalence of the ordinary differential equation (ODE) $x' = f(x)$, where f is a transcendental function. The method is a novel blend of mathematical methods, specifically the power series representation of a function, with the qualitative theory of autonomous first order ODE.

(6) Design of Algorithms for Computer Communication Network/Mathematical Foundation of Computer Science/Modelling

Development of an algorithm for constructing point-to-point network topologies. This algorithm has application in telecommunication over telephone lines, which is necessarily between one transmitter and one receiver

(7) Algebraic Coding Theory/Systems Programming

Development of a novel 8-bit coded character set which is a subset of the Unicode Standard, and presentation of a framework for its extension. The set combines some of the advantages of the famous ASCII (American Standard Code for Information Interchange) and the EBCDIC (Extended Binary Coded Decimal Interchange Code). The paper is an initiative towards the design of African Computer Character Codes and the development of technologies for processing indigenous African languages on a digital computer system.

(8) Usability Evaluation of Websites of Academic Institutions

In this research, websites of academic institutions are evaluated to determine the degree of compliance with relevant technical standards.

(9) Discrete Structure/Modelling

Development of a discrete structure model for constructing components of buildings.

(10) Algebraic Coding Theory

Development of a novel set theoretic nomenclature for studying the characteristics of uniform binary digital codes, with particular reference to Gray codes.

(11) Bioinformatics

Adaptation of a set theoretic nomenclature to the study of disease datasets.

(c) In Progress

(1) Design and Analysis of Intelligent Library Buildings

This research is interplay between the field of building technology and library/information science. It involves the application of the basic principles of construction technology to the design and analysis of intelligent and comfortable library buildings.

(2) Design of Algorithms for Compressing Text Files/ Development of Algorithms for Image Compression/ Development of Software for Data Compression Algorithms

Several algorithms have been reported in the literature. For instance, the one(s) developed by this researcher was shown to have a better compression ratio than a popular algorithm used in the design of storage-based built-in test pattern generation for scan circuits. The current research is an extension of the previous work, and is aimed at developing better algorithms, not just for texts but for also other data types such as images and audios.

(3) Computational Analysis of Popular Algorithms

In this research, the goal is to calculate both the time and space complexities of algorithms that are of high importance in several application areas, including medicine/biological sciences, engineering etc.

(4) Hybridization Properties of DNA Codes/Development of Algorithms for Digital Forensics

One of the important areas of research in Bioinformatics is DNA Computing which relates to the understanding of the inherent characteristics of the DNA, built up from the four nucleotides or bases, namely adenine (A), guanine (G), cytosine (C), and thymine (T) (or uracil (U)), which are otherwise referred to as nucleotides. DNA Computing includes the abstracting of computing ideas and models from the structure and functioning of living cells, and also from the way the cells are organized in tissues or higher order structures.

This present research is based on the fact that genetic information is encoded digitally as a linear code over the four-letter alphabet/set {A, G, C, T}, and thus focuses on the analysis of DNA structure from the perspective of set theory. This is with the aim of bringing to the fore similarities among DNA sequences, which is important for applied research. Significant application areas include digital/computer forensics and treatment of diseases such as cancer, malaria/yellow fever, sickle cell, rheumatism etc.

(5) Boundedness and Convergence Properties of Coded Character Sets

This research is concerned with the investigation of the boundedness and convergence properties of codes from the perspective of real analysis.

(6) Passive Solar Energy Technology/ (Solar) Energy Conservation in Buildings

Solar Energy, as an alternative source of energy is more relevant in present times as an important research area than in the past due to insufficiency in power generation, transmission and distribution particularly in Nigeria. This research focuses on passive solar energy development, including energy conservation and efficiency in buildings and the associated technologies. These incorporate solar heater, solar dryer, solar cooker, solar oven etc.
